Edmund Wilson was the leading literary critic of his generation. The author of Edmund Wilson: A Life in Literature and the editor of Wilson's Last Journal: The Sixties and of Literary Essay, Wilson chronicled the world he knew and loved, from F. Scott Fitzgerald to H. L. Mencken, from Karl Marx to Gerald Brenan and from Balzac to Proust. His prose is as important today as it was when he wrote it. This edition, which for the first time brings together all of Wilson's essays and reviews from 1920 to 1950, is the definitive collection—the book Wilson himself called his "personal chronicle of the times." Here for the first time are all of Wilson's thoughtful, brilliant, and often provocatively revisionist essays on the literature and culture of his day. There are essays on Balzac, Henry James, James Joyce, W. H. Auden, and T.S. Eliot, as well as on the great novelists of the 1920s and 30s. Wilson's revolutionary Marxism and his fascination with Freudian psychology are well represented. His lucid and engaging prose style is evident throughout. The essays are arranged in rough chronological order. The first three volumes contain essays and reviews from 1920 to 1940, and the fourth contains essays and reviews from 1940 to 1950. The four volumes together provide an unrivaled picture of the world of the 1920s and 30s as Wilson experienced it.
